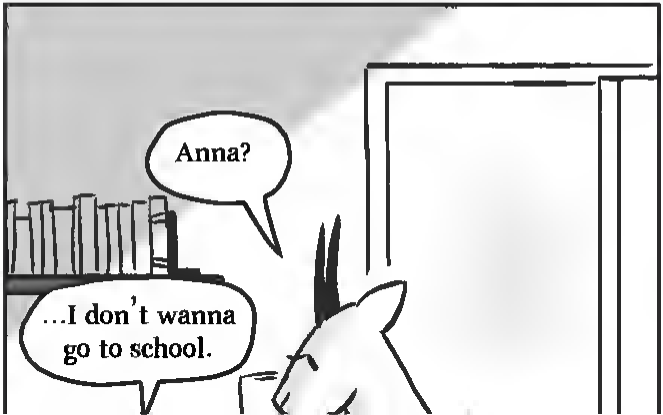
ROAR STREET JOURNAL

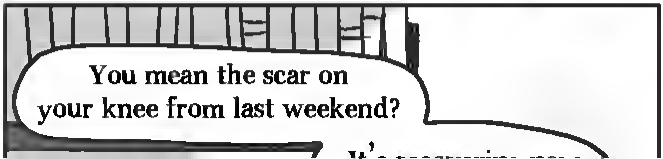
Scar Stories

Anna, it's time for school.



Anna?
...I don't wanna go to school.

What's wrong my dear?
...I have a scar.



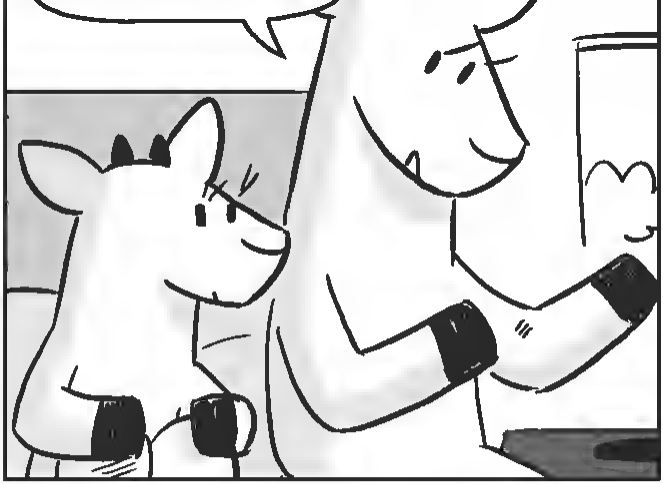
You mean the scar on your knee from last weekend?

It's recovering now, you can go to school.
It's ugly.

I don't want to go to school because the classmates will laugh at my scar...
They'll say I'm stupid that I fell and hurt my knee.

Isn't it "show and tell" at school today?
Mama will tell you a story then.

See this scar here?
I got it many years ago when I was cooking.



My parents went on a trip and I was home alone.

I tried to cook for myself and some boiling oil splashed onto my arm.

That was the first time I cooked.
It's okay to have scars.
Everyone has scars.
Having a scar means you have a story to tell.

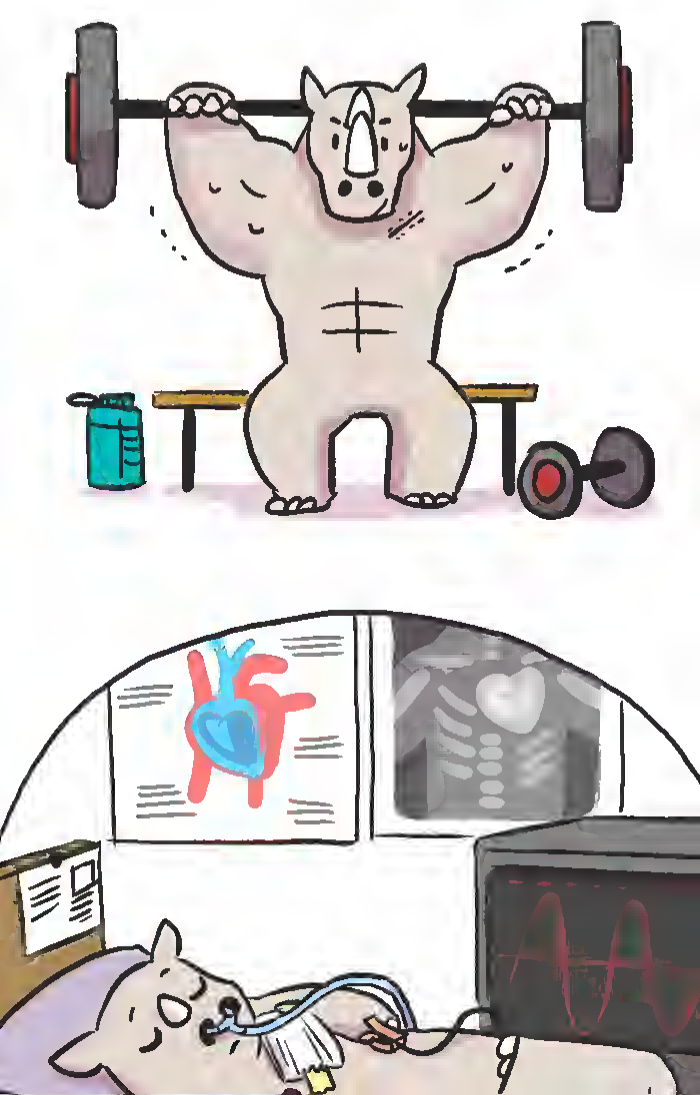
But mama, you cook so well now.
That's because I cooked for many years after that.
This scar is a story about how I became good at cooking.

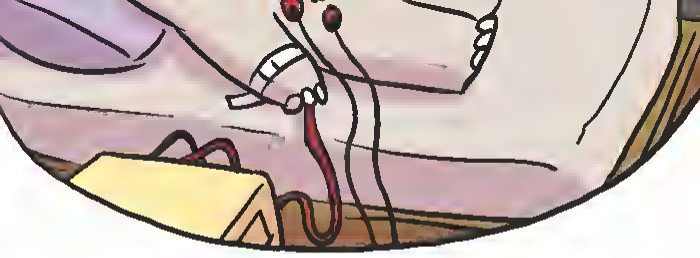
...so every scar is a story?

Yes, my dear.

There are all kinds of stories behind every scar.

Some scars symbolize strength.



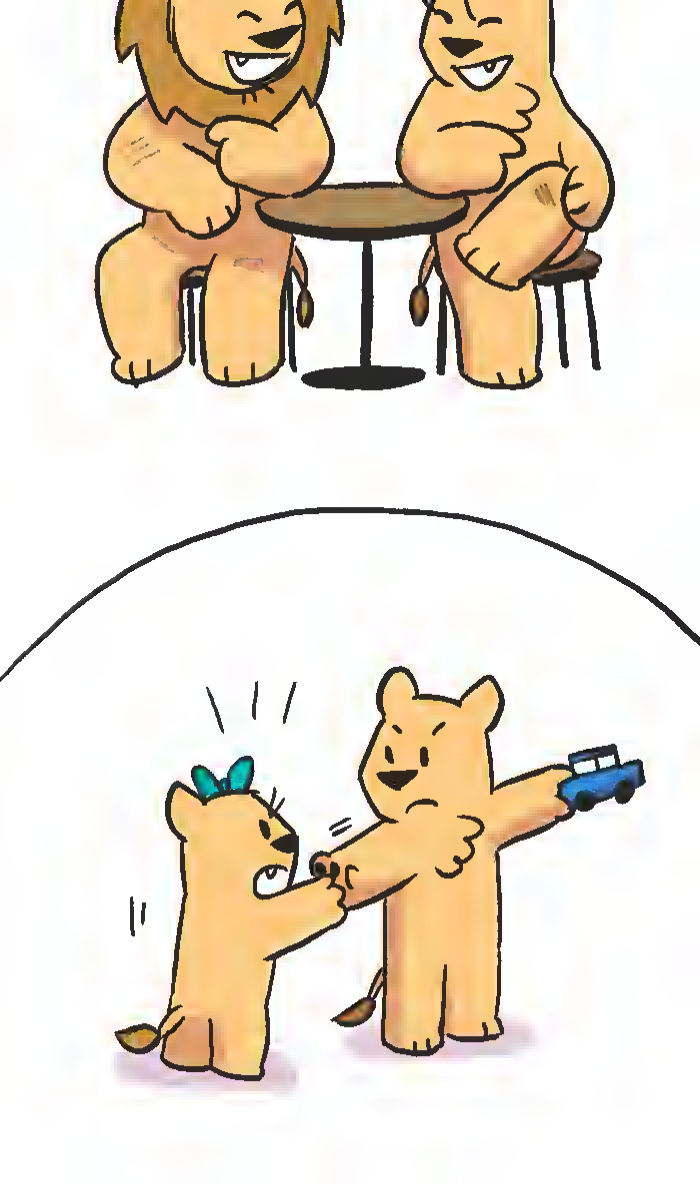


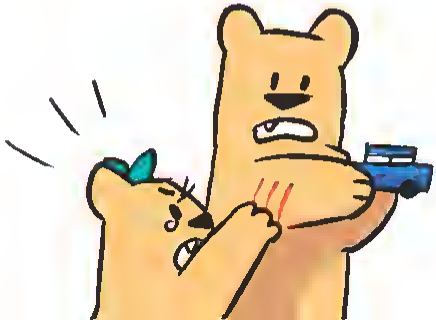
Some scars symbolize bravery.

Some scars symbolize growth.

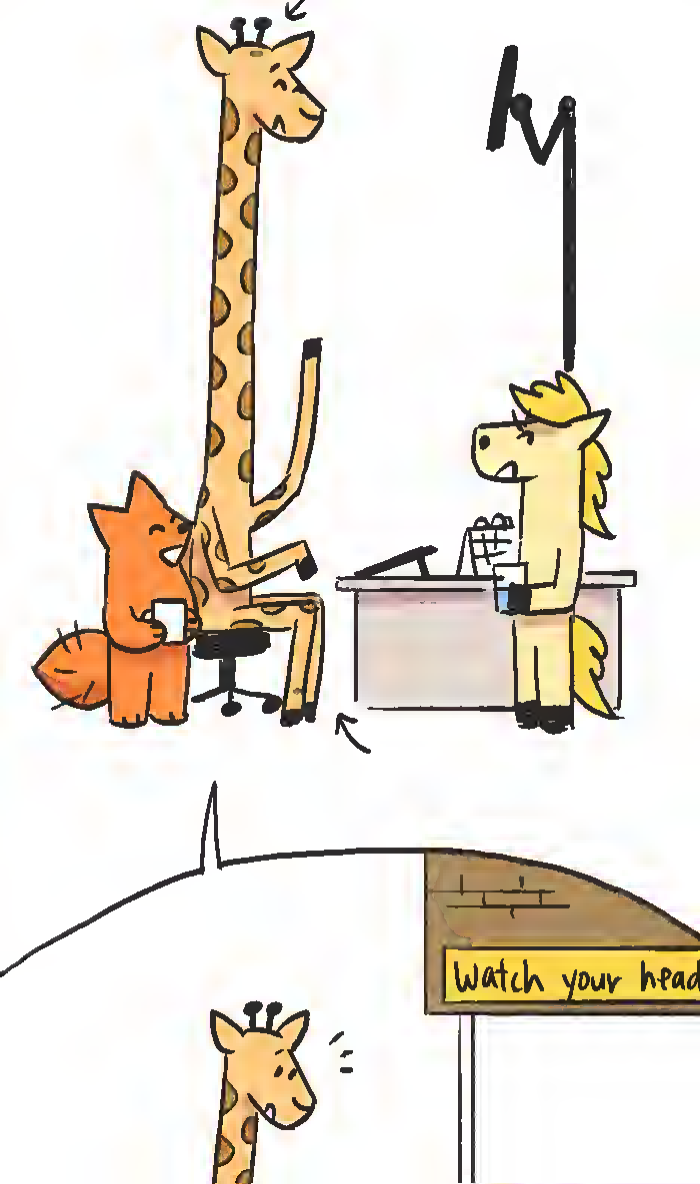
Be confident and Embra
TED.

Some scars are simply a record of our childhood.

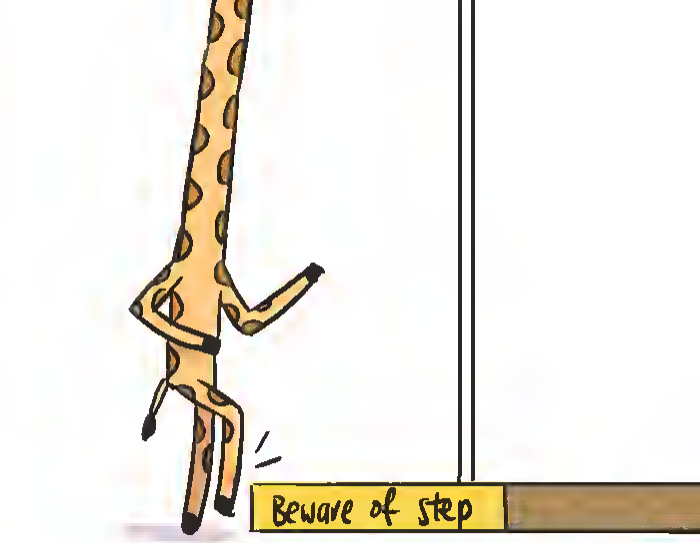




Some scars are a record of funny moments.

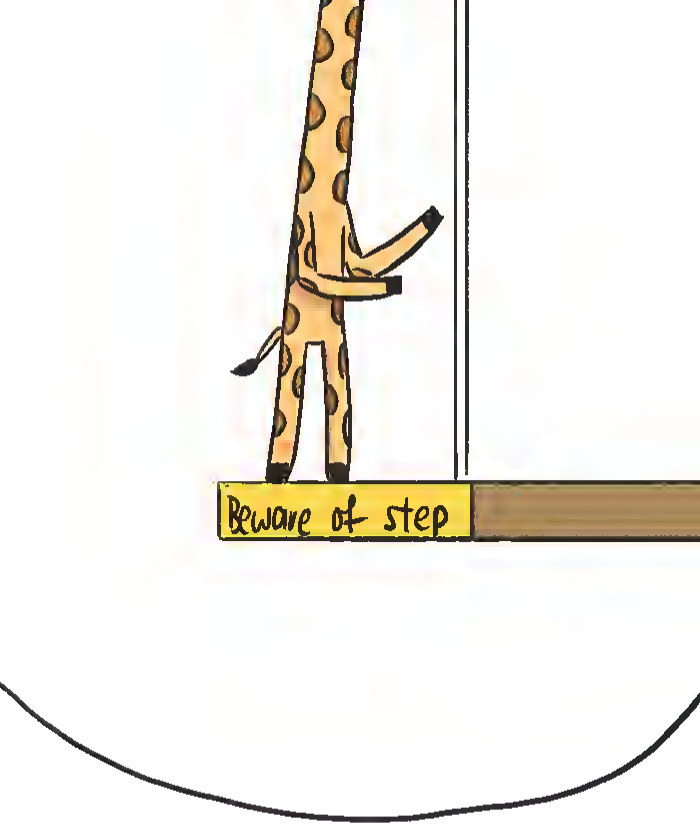


Watch your head



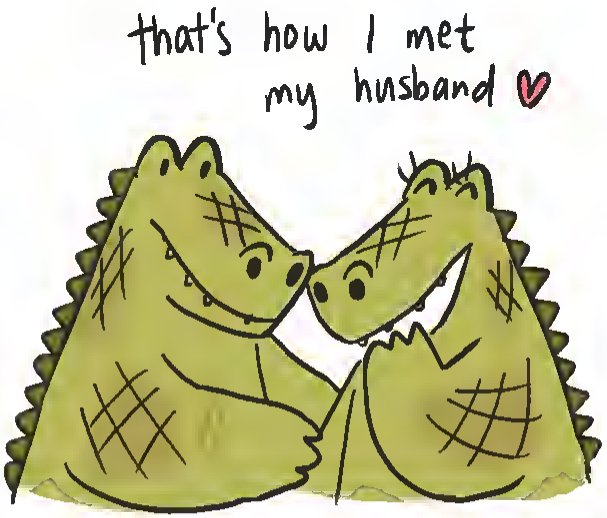
Beware of step

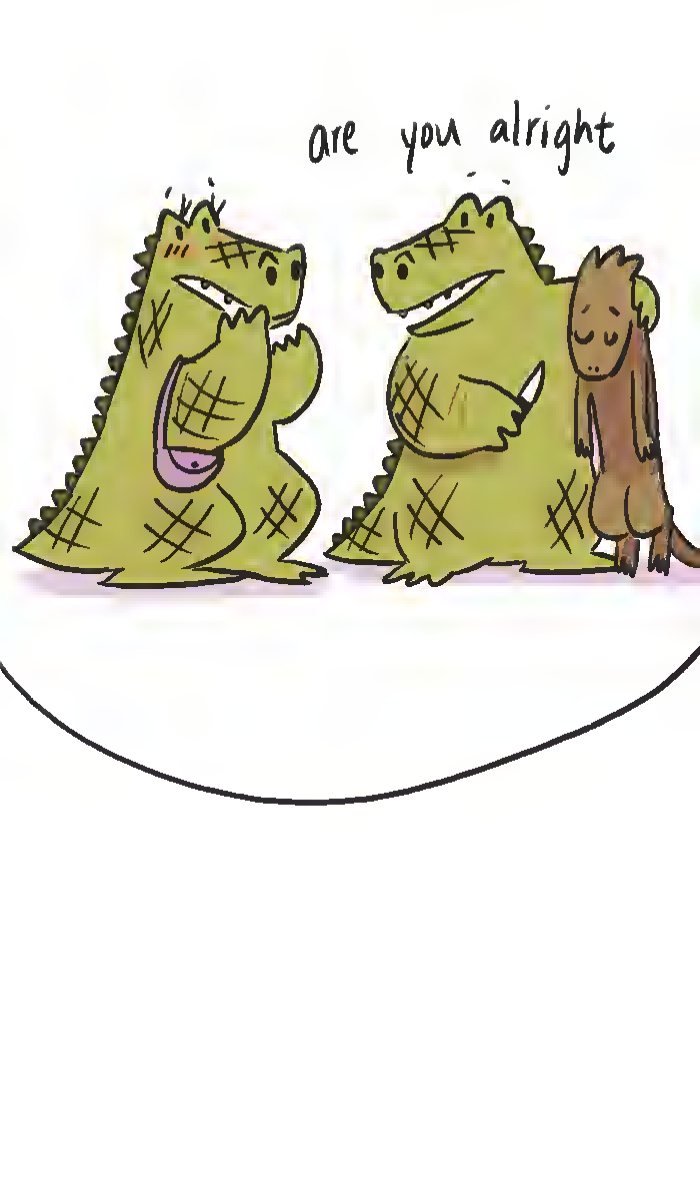
Watch your head



Beware of step

Some scars are even romance stories.





are you alright

Scars make you interesting.

Scars salso create new life.

You see my dear,
every scar marks
a victory from the past.

So be proud of your scars,

and don't be afraid to tell their stories.

SHOW & TELL
I got this scar because I fell from a tree when I tried to pick a flower for my mum.

I used to be afraid of heights.
But although I hurt myself, I felt good because I climbed the tree and picked the flower.

ROAR
STREET
JOURNAL

I did it, mama!

That's my girl!

RSJ 2017 CALENDAR!

Instagram: Bonniepangart
Facebook: BonnieEEP
Twitter: Bonniepangart

www.bonniepangart.com